Hyperelastic behavior of the aorta in patients with bicuspid aortic valve versus patients with aortic stenosis. Bicuspid aortic valve stenosis (BAVS) is an example of aortic stenosis (AS) with a unique morphology. It represents a paradigm to study the biomechanical behavior of aortic stenosis in the absence of an organized circumferential collagen structure. However, the aorta with BAVS is associated with high cardiovascular morbidity and mortality. A method for description of aortic shape in the BAVS context could be the quantification of the regional strain energy distribution in the vessel wall. The present study aimed at delineating the shape of the ascending aorta and
