This first feature film by Indian playwright Anand Gandhi tells three stories about people forced to think about the ethical and moral issues raised. Gandhi's first film, filmed in 1968, tells the story of the friendship and enmity of three people living outside of India in the United States. But despite the fact that the film takes place in New York, the director does not forget about the national roots of his characters. At the center of one of the films 'The Shooting of Lama' (archery) is Lala Bahadur, the son of a rich man, who was born out of wedlock, but due to his physical abilities, received a good education and became successful.
