IconPackager Crack +

IconPackager is a powerful application designed to change all icons on your Windows workstations at once, providing not only several built-in packages, but also the possibility to download new ones from the Internet. Manage and enrich your icon collections The interface boasts an eye-candy interface that makes everything pretty easy to use, so everybody should be able to use it just fine, regardless if we're talking about rookies or more experienced users. As said, IconPackager comes with several built-in icon packages, but it also boasts a dedicated tool to download more of them from the Internet. Of course, there's a preview window to see the content of the whole package, as well as the possibility to change colors and see live folders. Completely personalize icons on your computer Another important tool integrated into IconPackager is the possibility to change the content of every single package, which means you can customize desktop, Start Menu, folders, drives, files, Control Panel and even cursors. Every single icon can be replaced with one of your own. The "Settings" screen lets you pick the included icon sections, but also configure the app behavior when opening icon packages. You can thus restore all icons before opening a new package, use smart package loading or restart Windows Explorer on apply to correctly display all icons. During our testing, IconPackager worked like a charm and applied the new icon packages without any problem. Still, it's recommended to make a backup before anything else, just to make sure you're on the safe side all the time. A few last words All in all, IconPackager is a very handy software solution and it definitely serves its purpose in the right way. It can be safely used by beginners and more experienced users, although it doesn't include a help manual in the standard package. Bayer's Roundup cancer ruling gives consumers more tools This is an archived article and the information in the article may be outdated. Please look at the time stamp on the story to see when it was last updated. By Lisa Leff, CNN (CNN) — Researchers who study the link between exposure to pesticides and cancer have found that there is an "obvious" link between the use of the popular weed killer Roundup and the development of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, according to a recent study published in the journal of the American Chemical Society. Bayer's Roundup has been linked with cancers before, and the company has regularly touted its safety. But the scientists who conducted the study, from the National Institutes of Health's National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences, say the evidence has been lacking — until now. The study was conducted by researchers from the University of California, San Francisco, and other institutions. It included a review of previously published studies of Roundup and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and the analysis of hundreds of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma patients in the National LymphoCare Registry. The study found a "strong, positive association" between non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and exposure to herbicides, including Roundup, and that the association was stronger among non-Caucasian patients, and people who used Roundup at a younger age. "The number of cases of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma in these younger patients was enough to ensure that any existing link was unlikely to be due to chance," said researcher Beatrice Golomb, of UCSF. Healthy people vs cancer patients The study, which involved mostly healthy people, said it was not able to determine if exposure to glyphosate, the active ingredient in Roundup, caused the disease or if the two are linked to another cause of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. The study does not rule out the possibility that environmental toxins or other causes may also be involved. The researchers said they were unable to "exclude the possibility that glyphosate is an initiating or promoting factor in the development of non-
